Business Description

Tomato paste is one of the mass-cultivated products in the recent years. Despite the wide variety of products, the quality of the final product has become a determining factor in selling products in the global markets. Tomato has a huge amount of pigment called lycopene containing a lot of antioxidants. Lycopene in tomatoes also makes them red. No additives or preservatives have been used in the process of producing tomato pastes. High concentration in Dorta tomato pastes listed as brix on the product results in the economical use of this product.

To maintain the quality of tomato pastes, they are often packaged in special bags and then placed in aseptic barrels.

Today, knowing about aseptic packaging plays a crucial role in the food industry. Dorta uses aseptic technology to export its products. This method has almost completely replaced the freezing method ensuring the maintenance of product quality during the process of delivery. Thanks to high-quality products Dorta exports its products globally to Iraq, Afghanistan, Turkey, Russia, Syria, Armenia, Tajikistan, and Belarus in particular.
